Description : Description du produitAt the venerable Vulcan Theater, tensions are running high on opening night. There are the usual problems muffled lines, a late curtain, egos butting heads but the show must go on. And it does... until the entire production is upstaged when the leading man is found backstage, dead. Was it suicide or murder? Sir Roderick Alleyn assumes his role as detective in a puzzle that might be a macabre encore to a long-ago murder in the same behind-the-scenes quarters. Ngaio Marsh's mystery takes the listener into something far more intriguing than ordinary backstage squabbles.

Prsentation de l'diteurA classic Ngaio Marsh novel reissued.Dreams of stardom had lured Martyn Tarne from faraway New Zealand to make the dreary, soul-destroying round of West End agents and managers in search of work. The Vulcan Theatre had been her last forlorn hope, and now, driven by sheer necessity, she was glad to accept the humble job of dresser to its leading lady.And then came the eagerly awaited Opening Night. To Martyn the night brought a strange turn of the wheel of fortune but to one distinguished member of the cast it was to bring sudden and unforeseen death. From Library Journal actress make the book. James Saxon's smooth, clear delivery is well suited to the text. A popular choice for patrons seeking a "cozy" mystery; recommended for mid-size or large academic or public libraries. I. Pour-El, Iowa State Univ. Lib., Ames.
